

Who can make a submission to the Specialist Medical Review Council?

Eligible persons and organisations may make a written submission to the Specialist Medical Review Council (the Council). A person having expertise in a field relevant to the review may also make a written submission.

Written submissions should be in reference to the information that was available to the Repatriation Medical Authority (RMA), which is relevant to the Council's review, rather than on an individual case.

An eligible individual or organisation who makes a written submission, or their respective representative/s, may appear before the Council to make an oral submission complementing the written submission.

When do I make a submission to the Specialist Medical Review Council?

The Council must publish in the Australian Government Gazette a notice of its intention to carry out a review. That notice specifies the date by which all submissions must have been received.

Details of current reviews and submission dates can be viewed here.

What material can go into a submission?

Your submission provides you with the opportunity to comment on the information that was available to the RMA and which in your view supports your contentions.

Guidelines and a Submission Form can be found here.

What kind of information can the Review Council consider?

In carrying out its review, the Council must consider all the information that was available to the RMA when it made the decision being reviewed.

The Secretariat will provide you with access to this information if you request it.

The information that was available to the RMA when it made the decision under review is the only information the Council may review. If there is new information presented to the Council, or about which the Council is aware, it is possible for the Council to bring this to the attention of the RMA. A review council cannot, however, use new information to direct the RMA to amend the Statement of Principles under review.

Can I ask for legal assistance?

While you may seek legal or medical expert advice when preparing a submission, eligible persons and organisations may not be represented before the Specialist Medical Review Council by a legal practitioner, and submissions may not be made on legal matters.

Will my submission be kept confidential?

In preparing your submission, please be aware that under 196ZD(1) of the VEA, the Review Council may make any submissions it receives available to other parties to the review. It may also refer to, or publish, part or all of the contents of submissions in its document.

An author of a submission can request that all or part of the submission should remain confidential, by indicating this clearly on the front of the submission. You could also consider presenting any confidential information in an appendix to the submission to allow the body of the submission to be published..

Can I get help in making my Submission?

The Council's secretariat staff are willing to assist you with any questions you may have and to provide advice on how to complete a submission. Staff cannot assist you with content however. You may wish to ask your ex-services organisation for help when preparing your submission.
